A 42-year-old woman presented with abdominal pain for 10 days. She had a severe duodenal ulcer (DU), with perforation and an abscess in the left hypochondrium. A computed tomographic scan of the abdomen showed a 15-cm-long, heterogeneous image, suggestive of a perforated abscess. The patient was initially treated conservatively with intravenous antibiotics, gastric decompression, and nasogastric suction. After 9 days, the patient became febrile again and was then taken to surgery. A laparotomy revealed a 10-cm, purulent and gangrenous perforation of the anterior wall of the second portion of the duodenum. The perforation was repaired with a duodenojejunal Roux-en-Y loop. There were no complications. The patient recovered satisfactorily. The finding of perforated DU with an associated intra-abdominal abscess is extremely rare. The diagnosis should be considered in patients with clinical and radiographic signs of peritonitis, particularly if these signs persist despite adequate conservative treatment.Unidentified agents are getting through to suspected terrorists to persuade them to give up their fight. The US-led coalition battling Islamic State (Isis) believes that the group has "a complicated chain of command" and are "a bit obsessive about security" with "a bunker mentality". "You just can't identify every single individual, you just can't assume that they are behaving perfectly and their decisions are rational, so you need to be very careful." General 2d92ce491b
