We compared the therapeutic effects of bone marrow (BM) cell infusions that are either mixed with allogeneic lymphocytes or concentrated by centrifugation (CM). Lymphocytes were separated from CM by removal of mononuclear cells (MNC) using Percoll (1.040/1.087) gradients. Donors were buffy coats from BM donors (n = 5) or PB from donors (n = 2). Infusions (n = 5) were done in SCID mice (Hu/PBL) that were given 5.10(5) cGy TBI and 10(6) MNC from PB donors. Cytokine and cell dose adjustments were made to achieve CM or MNC infusions. Evaluations were done at 1, 4, and 9 wk post-BM infusion. MNC or CM infusions resulted in similar (P = 0.17) survival to day 60 (0/5 vs 0/5, respectively). CM treatment resulted in more rapid reconstitution of immune functions. MNC infusions did not prevent death by GVHD, whereas CM treatment (n = 3) resulted in only 1 death by GVHD. These data demonstrate that mixed and CM infusions were equally effective for the treatment of mice with BM failure. In addition, MNC separation allows a more rapid reconstitution of immune functions, particularly T-cell-dependent immune functions.Beautiful Star Altair Use the slider below to change the text size Monday, May 25, 2013 The sky is often packed with amazing planets.
