What's New In AmazonChargesCalculator?

AmazonChargesCalculator is a small program that shows the actual Amazon charge amount and the resulting profit for your products. The program supports two different methods of calculation, based on a two-dimensional table that you simply have to enter the selling percentages for each reseller and the application will display the Amazon charges and the resulting profit. You can also use either the European or the American method for calculating the profit. The program is designed to be very simple to use. When you first run the application, it will ask you whether you want to proceed to calculation or not. If you press the Enter button, it will calculate the charges and profit based on the reseller selling percentages that you enter. On the other hand, if you press the Back button, it will calculate the charges and profit based on the reseller selling percentages that you entered previously. In this case, the program will also display the corresponding Amazon charge and the resulting profit. You can easily go back to the first calculation by pressing the "Back" button again. If you don't have access to the selling percentages, you can use the "Refresh" button to update them from the application. To get started, simply enter the reseller selling percentages (which are: base selling percentage, average shipping and handling percentage, etc.) in a table as follows: The program will then calculate the charges and the resulting profit for two different sellers and will display the Amazon charges and the resulting profit in Euros. How to use: Just enter the reseller selling percentages in the table: You can press the Enter button to start the calculation. You can then press the Back button to go back to the calculation based on the reseller selling percentages that you entered previously, or you can press the Refresh button to update the reseller selling percentages from the application.
