It usually took some time before the next coup, and we didn't know what it would be, but we could smell it. It had to be coming. At the Rio Hotel, where we were holed up along with the Marines and the journalists, the wait was excruciating. We'd heard some shots, and then another, but as we were told, that could have been anything from a ricochet to an errant ball. At the time the nine-day war had been going on for four days. We could hear tanks outside the hotel, and occasionally in the night, the occasional howl of a Japanese rocket. We'd heard about how one journalist, operating on the outskirts of the city, had fired on the retreating Japanese, and how the shots had brought his convoy in to safety. And, of course, we had heard about the nineteen-year-old social worker who'd never seen a war, a U.S. Navy ensign from Texas, who'd volunteered to accompany the Marines. The twenty-year-old American didn't speak Japanese, and got into a midair argument with a tanker who wanted to deliver propaganda leaflets over the city. The young ensign told him they weren't going to do it, and the argument nearly cost the young man his life. His plane was shot down in the lake in front of the hotel and he was captured. In the Western media, the ensign was christened "Japan's Goodwill Ambassador." This was the calm before the storm. After the peace, 09e8f5149f

I.e. 0x00, 0x0a, 0x20 etc. I think I might need to use a few of the other chars set/byte functions, but I can't seem to find the correct string or byte functions. I am probably asking for the wrong thing, as the code is pretty old and no longer working. I am asking what the best course of action might be here. A: If you're actually working with 1s and 0s, then use the ASCII class: `const char* asciiZero = "\x00";`
