Vascular endothelial cells (ECs) are critical in angiogenesis. Activation of NF-kappaB can up-regulate the expression of multiple genes, including cell cycle-related proteins, growth factors, and angiogenic factors. IKK2, a major serine-threonine kinase of the IkappaB kinase complex, is considered a critical effector of NF-kappaB signaling. In the present study, we aimed to develop an siRNA-based therapeutic strategy targeting IKK2 expression in ECs to inhibit angiogenesis. We successfully constructed a psilencer2.1-siRNA vector expressing short hairpin RNA specifically targeting IKK2 in ECs by recombining siRNAs targeting mouse IKK2 (mIKK2) into the psilencer2.1-siRNA vector. Subsequently, the mRNA expression and protein levels of IKK2 in ECs were determined by reverse transcription-polymerase chain reaction and Western blotting, respectively. The inhibitory effects of IKK2-siRNA on EC proliferation and migration were examined using a wound healing assay and a Transwell migration assay. The effect of IKK2-siRNA on vascular endothelial growth factor expression and tumor growth was examined in a mouse glioma tumor model. The efficiency of IKK2- 3e33713323
